Hi Scott. I'll definitely be interested in what you put together. Once you have something together, let's talk.

Thanks.

OK, I'm doing some research on the whole HHW rule, and some of the state's collection programs, regulatory definitions, etc etc. After looking at this stuff for a little while, my first inclination is to say we need to have another discussion about it, perhaps with Harry, Kelly and Craig involved. There are HHW aspects and used oil aspects to this. I'm going to look a little deeper, and will draft up a blurb of my findings, the regulatory aspects, the logistical aspects and where I think we can go from there.

Also, FYI, I just sent a couple of e-mails back and forth with Luis, then also talked to him. Long story short, he said go ahead and work with the WVDEP and Momenive people to ensure compliance with the PCB regulations. I have a meeting with them here in my office next Tuesday. regards Looks like there is a pretty good list there. I just found out today that OECEJ has a compliance assistance coordinator. It is Makeba Morris – I shot her a message to find out what she does – If she can be of any assistance, I'll let you know.

Let me know if you get anything from HQ. Again, thanks for being willing to take this on. Much appreciated.

Hey Stacie. I found the table where I used to track HHW collections for un-manifested PCB waste. As I said, we sent out a few NONs to these places way back when (2009 time frame), but when we applied the exemption (761.63), the disposal facilities quit sending the exception reports to us around 2014. That's why the table only reflects exception reports received in that time frame. It will give you a good indication of the numbers of HHW collection points, the types of materials they are shipping and the levels of PCBs in some of these materials. I'll keep you up to date on the progress of my research in regards to this.
